Advances in Diabetes Care Amid Roman Ruins

The fascinating Roman Ruins of the Museo Ninfeo, which is hosting this Dissemination event, include some pottery and testimonies about diet and habits of the ancient population living in the Mediterranean area. Maybe we still have to learn something from the past, to better cope with present and future challenges. This is especially true when dealing with Diabetes' modifiable risk factors: recommendations to rediscover and use ancient grains, whole meal flours and unprocessed products are in fact among the principles of the best practice implemented in the Joint Action CARE4DIABETES (C4D). C4D is now in its last year, and is start proving its feasibility and beneficial effects. It is thus time to start sharing results and planning actions beyond the Project.
